Fluid Grouse Enterprises. Paperback. Condition: New. 302 pages. Dimensions: 8.5in. x 5.5in. x 0.8in. Roadkill is a dystopic novel set in the future. Written about the triumph of the human spirit, about defying incredible odds, and the blooming of love across barriers of culture, economics and traditional experience, the novel is one part social commentary and one part futuristic adventure story. The novel traces the story of Mary, a history professor at The Company university, who wishes to escape the stifling autocratic regime in which she lives and works. The novel also tells the story of Keats, a Bonded worker who, under the influence of a sense-expanding drug called existentialene, flees the work camp where he lives, into a mysterious region at the edge of his city, known as The Open Space. Encountering one another unexpectedly in this mysterious and uncharted setting, Mary and Keats pursued by The Company's security forces, known as Calvin's form an uneasy alliance as they flee deeper into what they soon discover is a large museum of fabricated eco-regions. Roadkill is a chilling speculation about a world in the not-too-distant future where religion, history and all aspects of human life are manipulated by The Company: a sprawling corporate empire of interconnected factory branches and work camps. This item ships from multiple locations. Your book may arrive from Roseburg, OR, La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
