The corpses of the populace are scattered in the streets, all victims of gunshots to the head. A lone sniper on the roof of the gas station shoots through walls, thick forest, and cars, killing people he can t possibly see. That he can t possibly know exist. Captain Layland of the Silica Sheriff s Department listens as a church bell in the distance signals, one by one, the death of his men. As night falls, the already disturbed sniper fires on the corpses of those he s already killed, chanting and screaming absurd commands. Layland watches as the corpses begin taking on a life of their own.
