Young Maurice Keeler dreamed of coming to America as a boy in wartime England where American GIs had candy in their pockets and the movies showed a life of glamour and cowboys and Indians. His dreams came true a few years later, when he flew to America to take a promised job—one dream that didn't turn out so well. He persevered, traveling the country, meeting people from all walks of life, from former presidents to young summer workers in a national park. Maurice also describes his early life as a naval student, an apprentice, and a junior engineer on British ships that roamed the world. The title, Travels in Darkest America, is a play on an 1891 travel-and-adventure story, In Darkest America, by Henry Morton Stanley, the intrepid journalist who encountered Dr. David Livingstone and uttered the classic phrase "Dr. Livingstone, I presume." The phrase "travels in darkest America" was jokingly said by two English girls who were traveling with Keeler, and it became the headline in a story that was written about the three young girls' English travelers in a Missouri newspaper. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
