Gertie Schragger was born in the East End of London at a time when poverty and hardships were a standard part of normal, everyday life. While most people were intent on finding small pleasures and enjoying their youth, she could not bear it, hating the crowded streets, the dirt and crime--always dreaming of a better life. When she met Nehemiah at a communist gathering, she fell in love and eagerly embraced the opportunity to move with him to South Africa. She welcomed the change in climate and casual lifestyle in Bloemfontein, but this became trivial when the harsh realities of racist politics and cultural divide isolated her from her roots. Years later when she returned to England, she began a journey of self-discovery, enriching her life with interesting people and an academic path that helped to better define her identity. However, there was one more significant relationship in her life that upset her peace. John was anything but easy to understand or forthcoming about his secretive life.
