A7 2007n OCLC Number: (OCoLC)301734466 Excerpt: . . . 11 Or there was an article, recent press reports out in the last few days about Marines for the last couple years wanting these daz-zlers, some kind of laser device, a non-lethal way of stopping cars that are speeding toward checkpoints, and have been frustrated in the delay getting those. Secretary E. So here is my only comment, I guess as a NGLAND general comment, Mr. Snyder. I mean, in any organizational construct there are always advantages and disadvantages, so we always talk about the disadvantages. But whatever the alternative is will also have disadvantages of another sort. So, I mean, generally people of good faith, you know, evaluate these pluses and minuses of different alternatives and decide that they will accept some downside, right, for certain benefits, and that being the best combination at that given point in time. So I am not sure of that in this particular case, but I would tell you, yes, there are probably disadvantages to it, but there will also be other advantages that people consider more important than the disadvantages. NYDER Dr. S. I wanted to ask specifically with regard to the big acquisitions that occur in the military. Dr. Hamres group came out, I guess, I think it was in their Beyond Goldwater-Nichols report of May 2006, they thought that the reason that we have had some problems in big acquisitions is that the service chiefs are left out of the line of authority in the acquisition projects until far late in the game. And by the time they have some authority to...
