Excerpt from The Opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Case of Gibbons Vs. Ogden, Delivered by Chief Justice Marshall, March 2, 1824: With a Preface, Containing an Historical Sketch of the Steam-Boat Controversy Would prevail against it. It was moreover denied, that any interference had in that case been shewn between the laws of this state, and the constitutional power of congress to regulate commerce it was alleged, that it would be time enough to consider that question when it should arise and the general answer given to all such supposed collisions of power, was the same as in the case of conflict with a patent right that the laws of congress were paramount, and must prevail. By a subsequent compromise, the opposition company was admitted to a participation of the exclusive right; and consequently that cause was not carried up to the supreme court of the United States. Pending the suit, both parties had united in obtaining from the legislature new and extraordinary penalties against any other interference with the state grant and as those penalties were applicable, at the discretion of the grantees themselves, not only to cases falling within the decision of the court of errors, but to those expressly excepted from its Operation, all further litigation in the courts of justice was for a season put to rest. The legislature was then resorted to, on the ground that the courts were in effect shut against claimants under an authority, which had been admitted to be superior to that whence Messrs. Livingston and Fulton had derived their right and the first applicant for relief was Mr. Ogden of...
