Brand New Book  Print on Demand .World demographic problems are strikingly increasing, and evidence based, scientifically grounded communication programs in managing these problems are common to find solutions to these problems. Current scientific research methods and communication programs and methods are considered in a vast amount of demographic projects worldwide to solve global earth problems. The day when humanity starts eating the planet, say experts at the home page of the New Economics Foundation is 9 October, 2006. New research reveals rising consumption of natural resources is pushing the world into ever earlier ecological debt, or overshoot. New calculations show that from this date we will be living beyond our global environmental means. Humanity has used up what nature can renew this year and is now eating into its ecological capital. Each year, the day that the global economy starts to operate with an ecological deficit is designated as ecological debt day known internationally as overshoot day. From now on humanity will be in ecological overshoot, building up ever greater ecological debt by consuming resources beyond the level that the planet s ecosystems can replace, and this has been called the biggest issue you have ever heard of. Part of the above processes is unsustainable demographic processes of global population. This is a serious risk for sustainability of human and earth ecosystems. Population growth, changing birth control, problems of migration, nuptiality, poverty, health crisis, ageing, mortality and various forms of inequality in these demographic processes are serious challenges to the human population as well as to the earth ecosystems. Managing these demographic processes is crucial from the point of sustainability. To make demographic processes sustainable scientific research and communication should be put in a new way and be...
