Excerpt from Historia, Vol. 8: October 1, 1921 One day Fritz made his pony ready in the buckboard and asked his new housekeeper if she would not like to go with him to the city, where he wanted to do some trading. After a slight hesitanoy she decided to go; hence with little Veva they left for town only a couple of miles away. There they took lunch at a restaurant, in the midst of which a tough bronzed seedy - looking hobo entered and leaning over the counter asked for a hand-out. Just at this moment he happened to glance toward Fritz and his companions. Meantime she had already caught sight of the tough-looking individual, at which there was a shrinking back, with a frightened stare that alarmed Fritz who sought to console. The amaze was soon smothered by a forced smile of dis sembling. The hobo again leaned over the counter and with a mean and savage side-glance made some inquiry, and with a sandwich ambled out, to the visible relief of Trola, hoping that he had not recognized her. It...
