New Friends Publishing. Paperback. Condition: New. 152 pages. Dimensions: 8.0in. x 5.0in. x 0.3in. A self-described ragweed, Darl Reynolds never should have amounted to anything. As the son of a coal miner and the fifth of seven children, he grew up during the Great Depression in the impoverished community of Monday, Ohio, a tiny worked out coal-mining town that collectively owned just one phone. During that bleak stretch, he was reminded once again that in this life change is the only thing constant. As someone who had written his masters degree thesis on the diesel locomotive engine...
