Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: .entices away a servant, or induces lrm to leave his master, may be held liable in damages therefor, provided there exists a valid contract for continued service, known to the defendant. It has sometimes been supposed that this doctrine sprang from the English statute of laborers, and Whs confined to menial service. But we are satisfied that it is founded upon the legal right derived from the contract, and not merely upon the relation of master and servant; and that it applies to all contracts of employment, if not to contracts of every description. In llarl v. Alilriui , Cowp. f,4. it was applied to a case very much like the present. In Qunter v. Axlor , 4, f. U. Moore. 12, it was applied to the enticing away of workmen not hired for a limited or constant period, but who worked by the piece for a...
