Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Popular Government, Vol. 12: June 1966 A persistent question which confronts most work release jurisdictions is whether separate facilities should be provided for work release prisoners. While positions vary, most advocates of work release would not recommend traditional confinement as serving the purposes of the program. Initially, it was mandatory for prisoners with work release privileges in North Carolina to be quartered apart from prisoners serving regular sentences.²³ However, the 1961 General Assembly amended g.s. 148 (c) so that the section no longer requires work release inmates to be housed separately from non-work release prisoners.²⁴ The 1961 amendatory act provided that it was its purpose and intent to allow the State Prison Department to determine the extent to which it is necessary and practicable to quarter prisoners with work release privileges apart from Other prisoners. ²⁵ At present, not all the prison units in the State, which house and handle work release inmates, separate work release from non work release prisoners.²⁶ Although there have been no indications that this has worked to the detriment of either the work release inmates or the non-work release members of the prison population,²⁷ the Prison Department is rapidly moving ahead to convert a number of prison units throughout the State into exclusively work release units. Another question which often is asked is whether work release should be limited to those inmates who are already employed at the time they are sentenced.²⁸ It is argued that while such a policy may tend to include only the best risks, ease administration, and minimize costs it probably excludes those who have the most to gain from a well contrived and well implemented...
