Narrowly escaping death, Kip and his companion, Hunter, flee across Southern Europe by train and board a ship bound for a world cruise. In Beirut, Kip and Hunter take up residence and befriend two young Lebanese boys as the chaos in Syria starts to spill over into Lebanon. Taking refuge at a compound in Tripoli, Kip and Hunter plan a trip to Damascus. A harrowing journey by car across the Lebanese-Syrian border leads them to a city under siege that has been calmed only recently by a UN brokered cease-fire. Before Kip and his companions can leave however, the powder keg explodes and Kips experiences first hand the brutality of a civil war that he is powerless to control.
