Bedford/St. Martin's, 2008. Book Condition: New. Brand New, Unread Copy in Perfect Condition. A+ Customer Service! Summary: "I can see myself teaching almost everything included here. Not only is the anthology representative, but it also serves to focus on some of the chief issues in early American studies today." Rosemary Fithian Guruswamy, Radford University "My overall reaction to this anthology is that it is one of the most thoughtfully organized and written anthologies of American literature that I have seen in recent years. Rich in visual materials, which are especially effective for an undergraduate audience, it is equally fulfilling in the content and choice of selections." Sharon M. Harris, University of Connecticut "I admire this anthology a great deal. But what recommends it, finally, is not simply its economies but the acuity of its choices, the unobtrusive depth of its learning, and its pedagogical and historical imaginativeness." Richard Millington, Smith College "Susan Belasco and Linck Johnson have done a fine job conceptualizing a kind of American literature anthology not currently available. Their focused attention to reading, writing and print culture will remind students (and all of us) of the significance of literature as a way of knowing. As I read I also considered whether the introductory American survey I teach would need significant revision if I were to use an anthology like this one. I found I could teach my course with their book." Pattie Cowell, Colorado State University "In sum, this text offers the best view of the cultural mosaic that is 'American Literature' that I have ever seen. I love the clear organization, and the various helpful apparatus, especially the historical contextualizations of a work's particular 'place and time.'" Thomas Gannon, University of Nebraska "I found this to be an excellent anthology, well-conceived and very well selected and...
