Excerpt: .but when eleven o clock had struck, and still he had seen no one, he could no longer resist the feeling of hunger, and seizing a chicken, he ate it up in two mouthfuls, trembling the while. Then he took a draught or two of wine, and, his courage returning, he left the dining-hall and made his way through several large rooms magnificently furnished. Finally he came to a room where there was a comfortable bed, and as it was now H past midnight, and he was very tired, he made up his mind to shut the door and lie down. It was ten o clock next morning before he awoke, when, to his great surprise, he found new clothes put in place of his own, which had been completely spoiled. This palace must certainly belong to some good fairy, he said to himself,...
