Excerpt from Stanley and Africa The great missionary himself has given us a very remarkable instance of the power of the Scriptures over the heathen mind - an instance which forms quite a romantic episode. In one of my early journeys, he says, with some of my companions, we came to a heathen village on the banks of the Orange River, between Namaqua Land and the Griqua country. I had travelled far, and were hungry, thirsty, and fatigued. From the fear of being exposed to lions, we preferred remaining at the village to proceeding during the night. The people at the village rather roughly directed us to halt at a distance. We asked water, but they would not supply it. I offered the three or four buttons which still remained on my jacket for a little milk this also was refused. We had the prospect of another hungry night, at a distance from water, though within sight of the river. We found it difficult to reconcile ourselves to our lot; for, in addition to repeated rebuffs, the manners of the villagers excited our suspicion. When twilight drew on, a woman approached from the heights beyond which the village lay. She bore on her head a bundle of wood, and had a vessel of milk in her hand. The latter, without opening her lips, she handed to us, laid down the wood, and returned to the village. A second time she approached, with a cooking vessel on her head, and a leg of mutton in one hand, and water in the other. She sat down without saying a word, prepared the fire, and put on the meat. I've asked her again and again...
