Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Corn Growing in Saskatchewan Fodder corn should not be stored in lofts or stacks unless layers of dry straw are placed between the layers of corn bundles. The layers of straw should be three or four times the thickness of the layers of corn, and the twine on the corn bundles should be cut. The straw absorbs the moisture and prevents heating. This straw comes out of storage so flavoured by the corn that cattle eat it readily. When stacked alone the corn should be well cured in the shocks, and the ricks or stacks must be made quite narrow to prevent spoiling. Some men have found that piling the cured bundles like cord wood is quite satisfactory. The ideal way of storing fodder is in the silo. There are many types of silo, but all of the above ground types are rather expensive and at the present time can only be recommended for those having dairy farms or a considerable number of growing or fattening cattle. The pit or underground silo is much less expensive, and although less convenient, it promises to lend itself better to the conditions that exist on many western farms than does the more expensive above ground type.
