This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. The words which I have just repeated form a part of that portion of Scripture which is appointed to be read instead of an epistle on Ascension-day. They were spoken not by any mortal lips; but by two angels of God, on an occasion than which we have no record of any thing half so remarkable, or one hundredth part so important. As I am going to take advantage of the heavenly declaration, P4 for the purpose of impressing upon your minds a few solemn truths, it may not be amiss if I give to you, in the first place, an outline of the circumstances under which the declaration itself was delivered. You have not forgotten that our Lord had undergone all which the providence of his Father, and our God, had designed that He should undergo, --that He was condemned, crucified, and buried. He lay in the grave his appointed season, and, on the morning of the third day, shook off the sleep of death. He then showed himself to his disciples; came in and went out among them for forty days, and satisfied them by his appearance, by his habits, by his language, by his acts of kindness, by his solemn blessings frequently repeated, that he was the same Jesus whom...
