At age eight, something has happened that she doesn't want the kids at her school to know - she lives in a homeless shelter with her brother and her mom. Abby is mad and confused, so she decides to write down the story of her life. A Quilt and A Home is a gentle story of an eight year olds perspective of parental separation, poverty and homelessness. The metaphor of quilting is woven throughout the book as Abby begins her story watching her mom work on a quilt. When things fall apart in their lives, putting the pieces together in order to get her family back to wholeness becomes her desire. Despite Abby's own feelings of uncertainty and anger, she begins to admire her mom for having the courage to navigate the difficult, sometimes tedious, and necessary steps to rebuild their life. This book explores decision making, asking for help, coping with feelings when life seems out of control, and coming to a place of hope for a future that is within reach. Recent estimates are that one in 50 children (about 1.5 million) are part of a family that is homeless in the U.S. each year. They may be staying in shelters, in family cars, on couches of friends or relatives, or on the street. Children who do not have stable homes are especially vulnerable - often experiencing hunger, chronic health problems and lack of access to care. A quarter or more of homeless children witness violence, and more than half experience problems with depression or anxiety (see for more information.). About the author Pam...
