Excerpt from How Thankful Should We Be: Comments on Natal The Durban trams are very light and clean, the wooden seats are reversible, and the cars are open on all sides, so that there is a constant current of air on the hottest days, but awnings are put up on one side during rainy weather. At the various stopping-places there are pretty wooden verandahs, kept scrupulously clean, and provided with seats for passengers, who can thus wait comfortably in the shade. After leaving the Botanic Gardens we plunge deeper into shadowy avenues, and soon the full beauties of the Berea are revealed to us. It seems impossible to do full justice to all that summer loveliness when attempting to describe it. As I write in the hot sunlight, the glaring white paper and hard black letters seem totally in adequate means for describing that leafy greenery. All romid me now the land is scorched bare and brown by burning winds and midsummer sunshine, the topmost branches of the tall gumtrees stir gently in the faint breeze, bird notes sound from the distant pine woods. Pushing the paper away, I close my eyes and dream myself back into the silent leafy glades, the glowing gardens and smooth, shadowy, green lawns of the Berea.
