Excerpt from A True Relation of the Travels and Perilous Adventures of Mathew Dudgeon, Gentleman: Wherein Is Truly Set Down the Manner of His Taking, the Long Time of His Slavery in Algiers, and Means of His Delivery For the first time master of myself, the old longing came over me, and laying out about two thousand pounds in goods that my experience had taught me were suit able, I embarked them in the Antelope. Captain Manwaring, who was an old friend of my uncle s, his ship then lying in the Thames bound for Smyrna, with several other merchants, and goods to great value on board. The parting with my wife was exceeding painful, as indeed it would be to any man of right feelings. My wife, poor creature, held up bravely until the last moment, though I knew that her heart was full of forebodings at the departure for so long a period of her dear husband; and the more so, since I had never yet left her and the stories I had related to her of my previous voyages...
