THE YOUNG PRINCE WHO, BORN OF A ROSE-TREE, BECAME A ROSE-TREE HIMSELF. Give me some wool, or give me fax, dear spinner, For my distaff is bare. Ill give thee, too, a sweet rose for thy hair. Hark, sister! the sweet rose whispers And tells a tale. Tis the tale of the Prince Who, born of a rose-tree, became a rose-tree himself. Then listen while I fill thy distaff. Listen to the strange tale There was a rose-bush in a forest, or rather a rose-tree, For it was high and straight like any tree, And threw a high shadow on the grass. And the forest admired the rose-tree; the Spring admired it also, And Spring and Autumn adorned it with fresh flowers. And the birds all said: What a high rose-tree! And the nightingale sang her best songs In honour of its flowers. The stream...
