Excerpt from The Chinese Repository, Vol. 7: April, 1839 Furthermore, Observing the present condition of the popular mind, I find so universal a spirit Of indignation aroused, that, should you foreigners remain dead to a sense Of contrition and amendment, and continue to make gain your sole object, there will not only be array ed against you the martial terrors and powerful energies of our naval and military forces - it will be but necessary to call on the able bodied Of-the people [the militia or posse comitatus], and these alone will be more than adequate to the placing all your lives within my power. Besides, either by the temporary stoppage of your trade, or by the permanent closing of the ports against you, what difficulty can there be in effectually cutting Off your intercourse? Our central empire, comprising a territory of many thousands of miles, and possessing in rich abundance all the products ofthe ground, has no bene fit to derive from the purchase of your foreign commodities, and you may therefore well fear, that from the moment such measures are...
