Createspace, United States, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .From the first chapter: 1. The Man: his Nature and Nurture ON a broad survey of the history of Modern Philosophy it may safely be said that the lonely philosopher of Konigsberg occupies the central place. The most striking features of this philosophy at the outset were its two extremes - the one eventually described by Kant himself as rationalism, the other as empiricism. Descartes inaugurated the first by his Discourse on Method and Locke the second by his new way of ideas. In Kant s Critical Philosophy both the pure reason of the former and the matters of fact of the latter find a meeting place. From him again the diverging systems of Fichte and his Absolutist successors on the one hand, the Individualism of Herbart and the Pantheism of Schopenhauer on the other alike take their rise. True, these aberrant systems did not flourish for long: some fifty years after his death the cry went forth: We must go back to Kant. The so-called Neo-Kantian movement which then began, has increased steadily and continuously ever since. No philosophers, not even Plato or Aristotle, can claim such a volume of literature, expository, philological, and polemical, as that which relates to Kant. The Berlin Academy is at this moment engaged in publishing every scrap of his manuscripts that systematic search can discover; and what was said some fifty years ago - Articles about Kant are springing up like mushrooms on every side - is still true to-day. Let us try first to put together from the scanty sources available a brief sketch of the nature and nurture of the man himself as a preliminary to the attempt to trace his philosophical development,...
