'A traditional view of Cornwall is of a land apart. For many it conjures up images of idyllic summer holidays with wide sandy beaches lying under blue skies. All such images of Cornwall were shattered during the years of the Second World War when Cornwall's position as the guardian of the Western Approaches thrust it into the front line of that global conflict. Black and white photographs throughout. One photograph shows Campbell Street School evacuees enjoying themselves on Readymoney Beach, Fowey, on 15 September 1939.
