Their food should never be thrown on the ground, but be placed on shallow pans or bits of board which may be easily scraped clean. Three meals a day is sufficent, for they will thrive better if compelled to go off between whiles and scratch. I find that I get better results from feeding chicks until one month old upon cooked food entirely. Once only, I gave some little ones raw dough made of corn meal--came home one evening and found no bread in the house. But next morning I was sorrv I had not let them go snppeiess to bed, for half of them were dead in their coop a n! the rest were creeping around crying, with their poor little crops distended almost to bursting, full of hard, sour dough in a state of fermentation. Seeing...
