A Word of Advice to Straight-Haired Folks: Addressed to the Freemen of Connecticut, by One of Their Number This measure is also exceptionable, as giving a permanent salary to a description of persons whose continuance in office is limited to a short period, and whose services cannot be from their nature ascertained. They may employ the representative six weeks, or, six months in the year. In the one case the compensation would be reasonable, in the other extravagant. A per diem allowance of sufficient amount, would, after the services have been rendered, and are ascertained, do justice to both parties. This has ever been the rule of compensation in the United States, and in the several States, as far as I am informed and it is believed that no precedent exists, where the members of a Legislative body elected for a shorter period than their natural lives, and whose services are uncertain and incapable of limitation, have voted to themselves an annual salary. But this law deserves more serious consideration, as affording alarming evidence of the prevalence of selfish and avaricious motives in the members of the National Legislature. When we calculate the immense sum of money annually collected from the people, and distributed among the multitude of persons, who, under different pretexts are in the pay of the government, we almost doubt the truth of a fundamental article in our political creed, which we once thought self-evident, that government is instituted for the benefit of the people So far are our heads turned by the strange perversion of political Opinion which prevails at the present day and so far are...
