The Beetle, Burrows, Cassin, Cummings, Fanning, Henley, Jarvis, Jenkins, Jouett Monaghan, OBrieri, Parker, Wai-rington, and Wilkes were operating, but were sent to navy yards for repairs before being sent abroad. Of those not operating, repairs were completed on the CunJiirifj May 12. on the Jarvis Mav 10, on the McCall May 23, on the Terry May 21.; The fact that 28 of these 44 modern destroyers sailed for Europe before the end of May and 35 before the end of June shows that only in a few cases were extensive repairs, entailing considerable time, required. The continuous service of these destroyers in European waters and the few repairs required in the long period they were there is proof of their excellent condition when they were sent on distant service. The deductions introduced by the chairman appear to have been based--First. On the theory that any ship listed for repairs is not ready for Avar service, not fit to fight, when it is well known that practically every ship is always asking some repairs or changes it desires, most of which have nothing to do with its fighting efficiency. Second. On supposed complements based on the number of men on board ships during the war, when vessels were being used for training purposes and were crowded with recruits far in excess of fighting complements. Third. On figuring in his percentages old vessels of slight or no military value--outworn craft which require constant repairs to put...
