Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: .Hebrew Syriac Arabic Persian As we are now situated these Mandaean writings are still to the souls of Oriental scholars what the man with the iron mask is to the student of modern history. Noldeke, in reviewing Euting's edition of the MSS. of the Quolasta and others, says: I have busied myself for years with the Mandaeans; I have read the newly-edited books carefully through twice, and parts of them much oftener, . and yet I have not so far arrived at any adequate understanding. Noldeke, however, as aforesaid, attacks the subject as a philologist only, and though his work is, as such, unique, indispensable and far above criticism from any living scholar, nevertheless the fact remains that no amount of pure philology will ever wrest from these faded pages the secret of their silence--by which I mean that long-vanished state of mental affairs under...
