Nurses are always in difficulties at first how to observe, and then how to describe, what they learn about those under their care. A table such as the following may be helpful, and assist in making a report if it should be required. 1. By Observation.--What can be seen and noted by the nurse: General appearance, attitude, tidiness, cleanliness. Facial expression. General health, colour, nutrition. Physical peculiarities. Actions, behaviour, conduct. 2. By Conversation.--A talk upon general topics will generally elicit a great deal respecting the-- Emotional state. Power of attention. Consciousness. Power of connected thought. By inquiry the state of the mind can be further investi-ated in respect to the-- Memory. Presence of hallucinations, delusions, or obsessions. Difficulties in respect to self-control. Impulsive tendencies--suicidal, homicidal. 3. Letters written by the patient, when available, frequently xhibit want of self-control and defective judgment...
