Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.2in. Excerpt from Improvement Era, Vol. 23: February, 1920 There appear to be these distinguishing characteristics in spirit visitations, which may roughly classify them into two divisions, - servants of some higher power, with some important message to deliver to men, and those which are the result of what you might term psychic influence, and which generally are shadowy, indefinite and personal, in their information to men. The first of these have had a marked influence in shaping the lives of mankind, and in forwarding the principles of righteousness; the latter are confined to their immediate circle, and, outside of the meager comfort that may come from the knowledge of the existence of a future state that they give, are really of little importance. Men study them as they would follow a scientific theory only. One would think that, it being proven that spirits do exist and have the power of expression, a collateral truth would have to be admitted also, that when they leave this earth, they engage in new experiences, and consequently acquire more knowledge. That being admitted, one must despair at the failure of spiritualism to give to mortals some of the benefits of the wisdom of those who are advanced. What are the conclusions that Socrates must have arrived at in his 2500 years of spirit life Has he not now a more comprehensive view of existence, in that he can contemplate and weigh in his philosophy the mortal and the spiritual How much more pithy might not Pascals pointed sayings be than his published earthly utterances! And Newton, who protested to his admirers, when they attested him as to the extent of his learning,...
