Excerpt from The Cuban Patriots: A Drama of the Struggle for Independence Actually Going on in the Gem of the Antilles, in Three Acts This drama was not inspired under the excitement produced by the butcheries of the ill-fated Virginius prisoners; nor is its object to add fuel to the flame of just indignation enkindled by the revolting atrocities perpetrated by the Spaniards in Cuba. The plan was conceived five or six months ago, and ever since the author has devoted to the work every minute of time he could spare from his regular occupations. The aim of the play is to present a faithful picture of the stirring events, manners, and life in the Central Department of that unfortunate island during the first half year of the present struggle for independence. The action is laid in Puerto Principe (the author's birthplace) and surrounding country. Although the battle in the last act did not take place as represented, it is within the bounds of likelihood. Several engagements of about the same magnitude occurred at the time in that same district (Camaguey), in one of which, at least, the Spanish troops, under General Puello, were defeated with very serious losses. The requirements of the plot have compelled the author to locate Senor Blanco's hacienda close to the Cascorro Mountain, when in fact no hacienda of any importance is found within ten or twelve miles of it; but this does not impair the versimilitude of the action. A great many well-to-do, and even wealthy families, in that part of the island abandoned the cities at the...
