Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Normal Herald, Vol. 14: April, 1908 Working along the same line, to secure a longer residence on the part of the student, the attempt is making to render the life of the student a life of happiness, a life of quiet, but abiding joy which the scholar knows. Cordial and sympathetic relations between teacher and taught have contributed much to the accomplishment of this aim. The teaching body is imbued with the thought that a sound development receives its impulse from within, but that the guiding hand of the experienced teacher can aid the process much. Freedom does not mean license. There is a growing feeling in the school that there is here forming a great machine, a machine that is growing to grind iron and that any one who gets his fingers in the cogwheels will get hurt before the machinery can be stopped. The feeling may be voiced in the words of the great American poet, Though the mills of the gods grind slowly, Yet they grind exceeding fine. Chapel Talks. This...
