Excerpt from Improvement Era, Vol. 1: Organ of Young Men s Mutual Improvement Associations; November, 1897 I have been kindly invited by the management of the era to lay before its readers a statement of the doctrine and organization, with the reasons or authority therefor, of the Catholic Church. As these subjects are of a broad and com prehensive character, only a brief outline of them can be expected within the space allowed me by this little magazine. However, I will try to trace, with some degree of fullness, a few of the principal and most important doctrinal and organic features of the church and will begin, by way of introduction, with some necessary observations on religion in general.
