When the human race was sent to earth, it was given two dangerous powers: Love and Shamanism. No one was warned both were potentially lethal unless held in check. No one knew that four Tauruses uplands youngsters were massacred in a remote village called Susuzkaya. Their disappearance remained a mystery, noted as nothing more than missing in official records. No trace of them was ever found, dead or alive. Three engineering undergraduates who had never met before arrive the same site twenty-three years later to do their internship on a dam construction. The destiny that brought them together encompasses much more than their internship site as events would soon suggest. The engineers were all born on the same soon suggest. The engineers were all born on the same day, the fateful Sunday when the four youngsters had vanished into thin air. At first they fail to recognise the danger presented by the primitive shamanist enclave that is Susuzkaya. They then learn, to their horror, that these peculiar villagers not only...
