A ventilated and lighted brooder or apartment warm enough to prevent the chicks from chilling. III. A run protected from the wind and storms by being enclosed within a brooder house. IV. An outside yard available in pleasant weather. An indoor brooder must of itself supply the first two requirements; while the outdoor brooder must supply the first three to be complete. Having gathered together all available brooders of as many makes as possible, carefully examine them to see how perfectly each one is designed to fulfil the above-mentioned requirements. First examine the indoor brooders and note the following points. Some are constructed with single and some with double hovers, in either case one lamp being sufficient to supply the necessary heat. Remove or open the top of the...
