Outskirts Press, United States, 2010. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 201 x 127 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.My father left shortly after I was born and returned on my thirteenth birthday. I had no memory of him and harbored no ill feelings towards him. He was attached to my heart by no actions of his own. I was sitting on the porch daydreaming when the high yellow stranger walked up. He extended his hand and said hello. I knew it was him our eyes matched perfectly. He lowered his strong face equal with mine and apologizes quietly. He mumbled words that were full of sadness and tinged with love. He explained how he lost his way in life and disappeared among the journey of circumstances. My mother stood at the door peering through the screen as she cleared her throat to get his attention. He looked at her with frightened hazel eyes. Her soft brown hands opened the door as she stepped into the sunlight. The frown on her face questions his arrival. The high yellow stranger turned his head to disconnect from her gaze. He backed slowly down the steps and said hello. She interrupted him with a quick response by stating, We are perfect and we don t require your presence. The high yellow stranger chuckled, low at first, then hysterically. He tried to explain to her that life wasn t fair. My mother shooed him away with her hands as if he was a fly buzzing around her ears annoying her. The high yellow stranger walked away clumsy. He glanced back at me and winked his eye while mouthing the words I love you. That scene between my parents set the tone for me. I understood without a doubt that my...
