After discontinuing all of my former works, I took an involuntary hiatus from writing seeing as I just felt like I wasn't that inspired. As these poems tend to go, there's a lot of personal issues I talk about and rehashing the past to just kind of let a lot of things go. I just write whatever I feel at any given moment, even in the most obscure verses like coding my heart to be hidden in plain sight. I will say perhaps my writing style is a bit of an acquired taste but I suppose my hope with this is that it'll appeal to a much broader audience by offering a decent amount of descriptions on what inspired certain pieces and what various lines mean to me. I will say I was still reserved in some regard because there's some poems in here that I leave solely to personal interpretation because I feel like it can at times take away from the experience for the reader; at least as far as for those who appreciate a more abstract flavor. I will say that probably over half of it is more or less political depending on how one might interpret various pieces. However, I feel that although a piece may be inspired by one thing and a line may seem to say something in context it can apply to an entire array of various subjects and certainly reflects more about myself than even what I may be talking about. I will caution that some may find certain strokes of honesty to be perhaps mildly offensive, but I'm not shy or reserved when it comes to branching...
