This distinctly political feature of Laos philosophy was much obscured by Chwangtsz, and T-who considered it an intolerable burden for a philosopher to rule a country: 2 He would rather dwell in the secluded Mount of Miao-ku-sh, where he may live more in unison with Nature. We can hardly expect political teachings from such a philosopher. We may pass over Sun Wu and Wu Chi and hasten to study Han Fe-tsz and . 3F-3-, who brought the Lao-Han philosophy to its culmination. The primary object of Hans teachings was to inculcate in the prince the art of becoming a Pa. It was with the same end in view that he travelled from court to court in quest of a drincc to apply his doctrine, until he fell victim to the jealousy of another statesman of a similar mould. If Tsin, says he, when...
