The daily routine in the life of a distinguished person is of interest to a limited public only; but in the present case, this medium is successfully employed to convey a clear impression of the spiritual charm of that family champagne whose motto was, To learn, to teach, to serve, and to enjoy. - The Twentieth Century Magazine, Vol. 5 [1912] The last five years of Mrs. Howe s long life were fruitful in happy toil. If one learns the admirable lesson offered by this life, always busy, always joyful, always forgetful of herself in service for others, a long step will be taken in character-building. A portrait accompanies the little book and she .vs an aged face glowing with spirit and thought. - The Outlook, Vol. 99 [1911].
