GAO found that significant improvements in federal human resource management included: (1) the enactment of comprehensive pay reform legislation; (2) the designation of a single government agency with lead responsibility for federal employee drug testing; (3) increased OPM emphasis on employee performance management and training; (4) revised regulations regarding reductions in force; (5) the enactment of legislation prohibiting agencies use of appropriated funds for Schedule C appointees salaries; (6) improved agency hiring practices; and (7) reduced expenses for health benefits programs. GAO also found that key recommendations still requiring action involve: (1) performance incentives for federal employees; (2) clarification of the uses and goals of the Intergovernmental Personnel Act Mobility Program; (3) OPM regulatory and enforcement authority over the employment of consultants and experts; (4) agency authorization to incur obligations but not expend funds when appropriations expire; (5) improved administration and effectiveness of lobbying laws and regulation; and (6) comprehensive reform of the federal labor-management relations program.
