Excerpt from Popular Government, Vol. 30: May 1964 The Ministry of Housing and Local Government traces the idea of the Green Belt back to the very early days of Eng land s history, when most towns were surrounded by open land. This land was used basically for agriculture, but it also served as a site for fairs and sports, a barrier against the spread of disease, and an Open space which any enemy must cross before assaulting the city walls. In 1580 Queen Elizabeth I issued a royal proclamation forbidding new development within three miles of Lon don s gates, so as to insure the availability of a supply of food and to impede the spread of the plague. In 1657 Parlia ment established a precedent for some present-day zoning near American metropolitan areas, when it attempted to slow urbanization by requiring all new dwellings within 10 miles of Lon don to have lots of at least 4 acres.
