Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Oldest Story: Doings of Our Ancestors in India Years Ago A few years ago, while I was roaming about the delta of the Indus, upon the beach of the Arabian Sea, my attention was attracted by a piece of slab upon which strange characters were engraved Just at that moment my mind was fixed upon a seemingly different idea, namely, the great antiquity of the soil upon which I trod. I was wrapped in Vedic song, and yet I made an unconscious halt, gazing intently upon the slab which the ebbing and flowing waves for centuries had evidently at last succeeded in dashing upon a peaceful shore. Slowly I awoke from my Vedic dream; warily, as if the fragment had been cast upon consecrated ground, I raised and examined the stone, and saw that the deeply-indented characters, as well as the smooth surface upon which they had been chiselled, must have been the work of human hands. Presently I thought that the letters and words were Sanskritic, but the effacing work of ages and the smallness of the fragment hindered my arriving at a fixed conclusion as to the nature and value of my find. I seized the earliest opportunity of taking my booty, thus wrested from the ocean's grasp, to a friend and teacher, a great Indian Sanskritist At first this famous scholar also seemed perplexed, but he soon concluded that the letters and language were of a very ancient type - a sort of pre-Vedic Sanskrit His curiosity, as well as my own, became very great, and before many months had elapsed, he gathered around him a band of Sanskrit scholars...
