You're not sounding so much like a computer any more, I observed. Hush, she said, kind of absently. I brought my emotional software back online, and I've been integrating your speech pattern with the language in the material I've got access to from your time period. I think I have a feel for it now. I had to admit, I was fascinated. Her projection was showing some distortion; fragmenting into vertical running bands of red, green, and blue, widening out, then pulling back together again, flickering into black and white two dimensionality, then back into color and seeming solidity. Ah said hush and ah MEAN it, she said, in a sudden southern accent, waving her hand at me, and I could see a flicker of a flirty smile as she did it. Abruptly her image wavered, then re-focused. She was now short. . . well, as short as she had been before, anyway. . . a little bit plump, big busted and wide hipped, with shaggy dark blond hair cut in a pageboy crop and feathered back on her temples, and a face that was pretty without being movie star gorgeous. Big blue eyes set nicely on either side of a slightly blocky nose, a wide, full lipped mouth, square chin, slight suggestion of a fleshy pudge under the line of her jaw. Very nice looking. . . actually quite sexy. . . without really specifically resembling anyone I'd ever seen before. Very individual. She also had plump nipples about the size of plums and the shade of half ripe strawberries protruding from a lovely set of nicely rounded, just slightly saggy, very full breasts.
