In that terrible storm, when we thought the house was going to be washed away! Oh, my lady, its the loveliest baby! I had presence of mind enough to try to hide my dismay. The semi-darkness was a fortunate thing for me. How is the mother I asked. Splendid. Shes asleep now. And the child Oh! Such a dear you never saw! And its all right Its just the living image of its mother! You shall see! We moved towards the house, slowly, while I got my thoughts together. Dr. Perrin is here I asked. Yes. Hes gone to his place to sleep. And the nurse Shes with the child. Come this way. We went softly up the steps of the veranda. All the rooms opened upon it, and we entered one of them, and by the dim-shaded light I saw a white-clad woman bending over a crib. Miss Lyman, this is Mrs. Abbott, said the maid. The nurse straightened up. Oh! so you got here! And just at the right time! God grant it may be so! I thought to myself. So this is the child! I said, and bent over the crib. The nurse turned up the light for me. It is the form in which the miracle of life becomes most apparent to us, and dull indeed must be he who can encounter it without being stirred to the depths. To see, not merely new life come into the world, but life which has been made by ourselves, or by those we love-life that is a mirror and copy of something dear to us!...
