But that is typically Emma; she loved to paint with a broad brush and plenty of colour. It will be noticed that her two accounts--the Prince Regent Memorial, and the letter to Greville--do not quite harmonize. In the one she says that she personally conducted the royal family through the subterranean passage to the boats, while in the other (written within a few weeks of the actual happening) the implication is that Nelson, armed to the teeth as in the pages of boys fiction, undertook this business. Emma had not the temperament that is marked by meticulous accuracy, and this, like...
