Excerpt from A Report on the Natural Phosphates of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Arkansas Tennessee is Well situated for the distribution of fertilizer material to the Southern and Middle Western States. Its phosphate deposits occur in What is known as the Central Basin of Tennessee (elevation, 600 feet) and in the valleys of the western part of the Highland Rim (elevation feet) surrounding this basin. (see fig. The Central Basin extends across the State from north to south, lying between the Cumberland Plateau on the east and the Tennessee River on the West. It covers an area of approximately square miles of gently undulating country. The phosphate deposits have been developed only in the Western part of this area, workable beds lying in parts of Sumner, Davidson, Williamson, Lewis, Maury, Hickman, and Giles Counties. The main streams in the phosphate regions are the Cumberland, Duck, and Tennessee Rivers, but there are numerous creeks and tributaries of the Duck River that are of great importance in the development of the deposits, as sources of water supply for mining and handling the rock.
