BY W. W. FORTUNE. Little has been said about the business side of Librarianship, yet I venture to say that the activities of the public library of to-day demand business as well as professional training. In a recent visit to the North I had full opportunities of examining the methods employed in several libraries, and the most successful libraries were those run by Librarians who were capable business men. No better example can be quoted than Manchester, where the organisation is on a scale equal to many of our big commercial enterprises. Here we have the business side of the library run in separate offices, and fully equipped with modern business devices, each department under a responsible official. The business arrangements in these Administration OffiCS of a big library organization are unique. Each official keeps exact records, and makes...
