Statement Federalism: Comments on S. 1214--The Federalism Accountability Act of 1999 The Results Act already requires agencies developing their strategic plans to solicit and consider the views and suggestions of those entities potentially affected by or interested in the plan. The Senate Governmental Affairs Committee report on the Results Act noted that the strategic plan is intended to be the principal means for obtaining and reflecting, as appropriate, the views of Congress and those governmental and nongovernmental entities potentially affected by or interested in the agencies activities. In that regard, we believe that working with state and local governments or their representative organizations to develop goals and performance measures in federal grant-in-aid programs can strengthen the intergovernmental partnerships embodied in those programs. For example, in 1996, we reported on a joint goal and performance measure-setting effort between the federal Office of Child Support Enforcement (OCSE) 12 and state governments. Initially, the federal-state relationship was...
