Excerpt from War Letters of an American Woman My dear Gaetano, I think your idea that I should come down to Vallombrosa and spend a month there and finish my book is splendid. The very name Vallombrosa has no end of charm. It sounds like shadows and I can imagine the deep wooded distances, dark, cool and remote. I have always wanted to see Italy in mid-summer and to know the country around Florence, of which there are beautiful descriptions in the Lys Rouge. Do you think you could get me a nice little suite of rooms in an inexpensive hotel You must be sure that there is a balcony with a view of Florence from it. I shall bring my secretary and my maid, and finish Mary Moreland, and begin my new novel, Carmichels Past. It will be too much fun for words to work in that silence, and then have some long walks with you and see the baby. If she is anything like her photograph, she is a darling.
