Excerpt: .on policies when issued, and herein lies the chief value of actual experience in soliciting. He should supplement the gifts of the solicitor and instructor by the ability to encourage and aid old agents, and he should possess the genius of imparting enthusiasm and inspiration to work to those who are associated with him. The branch office cashier is charged with the collection of premiums and the interest on policy loans and with the keeping of all oflice records. He is expected to look after all correspondence in connection with applications and policies, notify delinquent policy-holders of their obligations, attend to filling in proofs of loss, applications for policy loans and payment of maturing endowments and answer all communications from policy-holders, which are not of sufficient importance to be referred to the home office. He is also charged with the supervision, efficiency and conduct of the clerical staff. As in the case of the ofcials at the home office, the managers, cashiers and clerks at the branch office are paid by salary, although the manager sometimes receives extra payments (bonuses) for increasing the volume of business through his office and for adding to the number of productive agents. One of the leading economical features of the branch office system connected with the duties of the cashier is the prompt collection and transmission of premiums. Under the general agency plan it is customary to allow the general agent from thirty to sixty days in which...
